Kids' Guide to Healthcare

by Nicole Clark, VMD DVM (that's right, it's a veterinarian & a horse!) by Andrew Thompson

Caring for your favorite pony is a big responsibility, both for you and your parents. It means that you're the best friend of a creature that makes daily checks and is there when you need it for your pony.

Keeping your pony healthy is something you can do for your pony. It's not just a daily check for a regular pony, it's something you can do for your pony. It's not just a daily check for a regular pony, it's something you can do for your pony.

The normal vital signs

Both you and your parents should know how to take the vital signs of your pony. It helps to know these when you take it to your vet or the phone. The table below shows normal vital signs. Always check these regularly so you know what your pony's normal vital signs are. That way you'll know when to call your vet for a check.

Belly Checklist

Start with a belly check and follow the same pattern of examination every day. It's a good thing to know the signs of the horse's health. If you need to call your parents or your vet about a problem, you can describe exactly what it is.

- Check the horse's temperature, heart rate, and respiratory rate.
- Check the horse's pulse, respiration, and temperature.

WOUNDS, CUTS

Simple first aid techniques can help reduce the risk of infection in your horse's eyes, including discharge from eyes, inflammation of conjunctiva, or blepharitis.

- Wash your hands thoroughly and wash your pet before you start.
- Call the vet immediately if there is a wound or a puncture on the horse.
- Clean the wound and keep it still until help arrives. They will help to ensure further injury and bleeding.
- Apply pressure to control bleeding using a clean cloth or bandage if possible.
- Any change in color of the eye or discharge from eye is a sign of a problem. Call the vet immediately if you notice any of these signs.
